To Whom It May Concern:

My dry cleaning plant is in its fifth year of environmental investigation and remediation. EnviroForensics has handled my environmental problem from the very beginning by first locating evidence of my historical insurance which has funded not only the environmental work but also my legal fees. Before EnviroForensics stepped in the insurance companies were denying that I even had policies.

A few days ago, one of the representatives of EnviroForensics, Nancy Shields called me to see how I was doing and to ask my opinion on a couple of things concerning the project. She asked me: "Gary, if you had to do this over again would you still do it?" My answer was that yes I would, it has to be done. Every dry cleaner or former dry cleaner has to face the fact that there is a good chance that they have PERC contamination, no matter how good, clean and careful their past practices of handling PERC have been. EnviroForensics conducted a great deal of work before they ever collected soil and groundwater samples. This work provided me with a plan and a safety net that gave me confidence, knowing I was in good hands and doing the right thing.

I would encourage every one of my peers to face this problem head on, and the sooner the better. It is a long process and thinking that you can put it off until you want to retire or sell is only putting yourself that much further behind in achieving those goals. The time is right to do it now. Nancy also wanted my opinion on how I felt EnviroForensics was doing. I told her that I was happy with the work and the efforts of the scientists and engineers working on my behalf. I am also happy that this expensive project is being paid for in its entirety by my historical insurance policies.

EnviroForensics has really helped me by restoring my business and my property to their fair-market values. I wholeheartedly recommend EnviroForensics and the full-service approach that they use, from finding and using historical insurance to strategizing the cleanup of the PERC contamination beneath my business.

Sincerely,

Gary Maloney Pres.
